pyqtgraph plot doesn't show anything I use pyqt4 + pyqtgraph to plot a graph.

The graph is created ok, but nothing shows up on the plot. The graph gets created because the gui shows up on the bottom right corner of the screen, and when I click on it I get the message shown on the image: Here's the code I'm using: from PyQt4 import QtGui, QtCore from PyQt4 import

QtCore import random import pyqtgraph as pg class

TestDataVisualizer(QtGui.QWidget): def __init__(self,parent=None): super(TestDataVisualizer, self).__init__(parent) self.create() def create(self): x = [] y = [] 648931e174

Users find creative uses for Perl Perl 5.10.0 adds a number of useful features to the language which may be of interest to users. The new features include two major additions. The new, flexible object model allows a user to write their code in a modular way, enabling them to use object methods without knowing the (possibly) complex internals of the object. This is a huge step forward for Perl. One of the other major features is a new nameless array syntax, which is Perl compatible with Perl 5.6 and earlier. These changes are combined with improvements to Perl's internal representation of data structures, a more flexible eval API, a number of performance enhancements and an new lexical string variable.

“The Innovator’s Dilemma” by Clayton M. Christensen is a book that I’ve recommended to many executives in different industries and types of companies. The idea of the book is that innovation is not a luxury, but an imperative for survival for any company. The book covers the concepts of disruptive innovation, market disruption and that value curves of dis-intermediation. The innovation cycle has previously been divided into three distinct stages: The ideal marketplace is the world of “disruption.” This is where companies work to turn their customers into partners, offering better products and services with more convenient customer service. They are working to “create value.” The problem with the world of disruption is that it’s very hard to pivot to a different kind of market once your product has already succeeded in one. The value curves of dis-intermediation suggest that as competitors catch up, you’ll eventually face the end of your market. So the goal should be to build something that stands apart from any obvious competitors in your market. This is the innovation that
